Centre for Advanced Studies in International Humanitarian Law (CASH), Rajiv Gandhi National University of Law, Punjab

The Centre for Advanced Studies in Humanitarian Law (CASH) is dedicated to promoting research, awareness and academic engagement in the field of International Humanitarian Law (IHL). The Centre seeks to strengthen understanding of humanitarian principles through conferences, workshops, sensitisation programmes, research initiatives and academic collaborations. CASH aims to facilitate advanced research, policy discourse and dissemination of knowledge relating to armed conflict, human rights and humanitarian protection.

The Centre actively encourages interdisciplinary learning and capacity building by organising training programmes, seminars and moot court competitions, while also supporting researchers and students through its specialised academic resources and library facilities. Through its initiatives, CASH aspires to develop informed legal scholarship and foster a deeper understanding of humanitarian law and justice in contemporary society.

Faculty Development Program (FDP)

The One Week program is conceived as a reflective, capacity-building initiative aimed at re-examining traditional approaches to legal teaching and encouraging a transition to pedagogies that are socially responsive, context-sensitive, and learner-centric. As Indian legal education confronts complex contemporary challenges ranging from access to justice and legal pluralism to technological transformation and interdisciplinary demands, there is an increasing need for law teachers to move beyond purely doctrinal instruction and embrace socio-legal perspectives that connect law with lived realities.

This FDP seeks to provide a collaborative platform for faculty members to engage in scholarly dialogue, share best practices, and explore innovative teaching methodologies that integrate doctrinal rigor with socio-legal awareness. Through expert sessions, interactive discussions, and experiential learning components, participants will be encouraged to critically reflect upon their teaching philosophies and redesign classroom practices that cultivate analytical thinking, ethical sensitivity, and social consciousness among law students.

By bringing together academicians, researchers, and practitioners, the programme aspires to strengthen pedagogical capacities and contribute to the broader project of transforming Indian legal education into a more inclusive, dynamic, and socially engaged enterprise.
